ANU College of Arts & Social Sciences

A Two Year Double Masters
The Master of Museum and Heritage Studies at ANU provides the unique opportunity to articulate with Indiana University (IU)’s School of Public and Environmental Affairs (SPEA) to complete a double degree with the Master of Arts—Arts Administration. These degrees draw on strong connections with cultural and collecting institutions in Australia and the United States. The double degree aims to prepare you for an innovative career in both museum curatorial practice (ANU) and arts administration (IU).

At the ANU, students will learn traditional curatorship and collections management, while also being introduced to new areas impacting on national and international cultural policy such as social inclusion, citizenship and community engagement, social activism and museums, Indigenous curation and collection, and innovative visitor and audience studies.
At IU, students will gain the management and policy knowledge, and the skills needed to become an effective arts leader in the public and nonprofit sectors. Students will be introduced to a range of core skills in the areas of management, audience development, finance, public policy, and fundraising, as well as a thorough understanding of the arts and cultural sector.

Learning outcomes

Upon successful completion, students will have the skills and knowledge to:

> Analyse, research, reflect on and synthesise complex approaches to museums and collecting agencies and their relationships to societies

> Evaluate significant debates, problems, controversies, concepts and theories pertinent to museums and collections as well as arts and cultural policy at large

> Develop critical engagement with, and a working knowledge of, museums and collecting agencies

> Communicate and interpret knowledge and ideas to general and specialists museum audiences, and

> Use a variety of administrative tools to effectively manage arts and cultural organisations.

Admission requirements

A cognate Bachelor with an average mark of at least 65% or international equivalent (for ANU students), or completion of 30 SPEA credits towards the Master of Arts—Arts Administration (for SPEA students) as listed in the award rules for this degree.

All applicants must meet the University's English Language Admission Requirements for Students.

Credit for prior study at AQF levels 7 and 8 is not available towards this program.

Indiana University

Indiana University is one of the world's foremost public universities. Located in the state of Indiana, United States, it has a combined student body of more than 110,000 students, distributed across Bloomington, Indianapolis and smaller campuses.

For the double degree, students will study Arts Administration at the School of Public and Environmental Affairs (SPEA) on the Bloomington campus. SPEA boasts top ranked programs in nonprofit and public management. With graduate degrees in Arts Administration, Public Affairs, and Environmental Science, SPEA offers a truly unique academic atmosphere for study.

Bloomington is a small, bustling college town in southern Indiana that is known for its arts and cultural scene. It is located within driving distance of several major cities including Indianapolis, Chicago, and Nashville.
